SENATE INQUIRES INTO FITNESS OF BLACK AS JUDGE

Administration Apparently Has Votes Enough To Confirm Nomination

MINORITY IS MILITANT

Appointment Diverts Attention From Pressing Legislative Problems

By William K. Hutchinson
L. A. S. Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—(INS)—Although the administration apparently commanded the votes to confirm him, the Senate today opened an inquiry into the qualifications of Senator Hugo L. Black, 51-year-old Alabama Liberal Democrat, for service on the United States Supreme Court.

A militant minority laid plans to contest President Roosevelt's surprise choice as successor to the retired associate justice Willis Van Devanter. The attack on Black will center around a charge he lacks the judicial temperament of a Supreme Court justice and on the technical contention he is ineligible for the appointment.

The inquiry opened before a special judiciary committee, controlled by administration senators who joined Black in battling for enactment of the President's recently-killed Supreme Court bill. All foes of that Court measure were left off the Committee of inquiry.

The Black appointment diverted attention on Capitol Hill from the administration's pressing legislative problems. Presidential spokesmen appeared to have the Senate situation in hand, after postponing action on the Van Nuys-Wagner anti-lynching bill until January. In the House, administration leaders were still trying to get action on the wage-hour and housing bills, while rushing a compromise governmental reorganization measure to passage.

Senator Barkley (D) of Kentucky, Senate majority leader, ventured a "guess" that Congress would wind up its program in ten days. He predicted prompt confirmation of Black.

There were some signs though that Black might face a heavy attack before getting confirmed. Two Senators openly condemned the appointment. They were Bridges (R) of New Hampshire, who declared he lacked judicial temperament, while the veteran Carter Glass (D) of Virginia, said he lacked the "necessary qualifications."

It appeared Black might be summoned before the committee for examination by his colleagues. At least two Senators privately said they desired to question him about charges he was an active participant in the Ku Klux Klan during its hey-day in Alabama and whether he served that secret organization as counsel prior to his election to the Senate in 1926.

There was a precedent for examining Black. In February, 1935, the Judiciary Committee interviewed Associate Justice Stone before his confirmation and again in February, 1932, Associate Justice Cardozo was questioned before the Senate approved his appointment.

A number of technical objections were raised against Black's legal qualification for the post. All were based upon his vote in favor of the Sumners Retirement Act, under which Van Devanter retired.

Senator Borah (R) of Idaho, recently raised one issue by declaring there was no vacancy on the Court, since Van Devanter remained a Justice. It was conceded generally that Van Devanter retained his justiceship but other authorities contended the law inferentially created a new position through automatic enlargement of the Court's personnel whenever a justice retired.

This drew a new objection from Senator Burke (D) of Nebraska, who asked whether Black would be eligible if the bill did create a new justiceship. He pointed out the constitution forbids any Senator being appointed to an office created during his term in the Senate. Burke announced he would ask the committee to request a legal opinion from Attorney General Cummings.

This would place the Attorney General between two dilemmas. He could hold Van Devanter is no longer a justice, which would conflict with the opinion of all Senate authorities, or he could hold the retirement act created a new position on the Court, which would automatically bar Black from accepting it.

Most administration leaders believed Black would be confirmed despite all technical objections. They also felt his record as a new dealer would withstand all attack.

WILL RAISE FUNDS FOR CO. CRIME LABORATORY

Police and Constables' Ass'n
To Publish A Police
Directory

CO-WIDE CIRCULATION

DOYLESTOWN, Aug. 13.—Funds are to be raised to establish a Bucks County Scientific Crime Laboratory, this to be the second of its kind in the East. This statement was made following a meeting of a committee of the Bucks County Police and Constables' Association, at the home of the association's president, Chief of Police James P. Welsh.

The funds, it has been decided, will be raised by publication of a police directory and soliciting of advertising.

The directory, which will have a county-wide circulation, will contain a history of the police and constable training school, the first non-tuition institution of its kind which was organized by Chief Welsh and recently held a very successful graduation following a three months' training course.

Funds will be raised by soliciting advertising from business men in every section of the county who benefit directly from the vigilance and scientific work carried on by the police daily.

The county authorities, directly interested in the new venture, have donated several rooms which will serve as quarters in the county prison, where the work of investigation can be carried on because there is space for the finger-printing and laboratory equipment.

Highly professional experts and officers trained in crime detection will be contacted by the association to carry on the work of crime prevention in the county with the co-operation of the county police authorities.

Members of the committee include Chief of Police James P. Welsh and Constable Earl D. Blair, of this place; Charles J. Clickner, Langhorne; Richard Snyder, Lumberville; Jos. Glove, Trumbauersville; Orville Morris, of the Inter-State Bridge Police; Chief Hallman, Sellersville; Walter Corson, Hartsville, and William McMullen, Newtown.

KINGS THEATRE GUILD TO PRESENT SECOND PLAY

Will Give "Kempy," a Three-Act Domestic Comedy, At Andalusia, This Evening

NEW SCENERY IS MADE

ANDALUSIA, Aug. 13.—When the curtain rises on the stage of King Hall here tonight the King's Theatre Guild will present its second play of the current season, "Kempy," a three-act domestic comedy.

"There has been a constant request for the Guild to produce another clever comedy such as 'Broken Dishes,'" states Miss Ethel Hartman, president of the group. "In order to please our many friends we decided to produce 'Kempy.'"

For the past few weeks the Andalusia thespians have been busy constructing a new set for this play. Much has also been done in the way of making a complete lighting unit for the stage. Although only a small percentage of the club membership is in the cast, nevertheless the remaining members have been busy sewing curtains and draperies, adjusting electrical fixtures, painting scenery and tending those numerous small details which add toward a beautiful and authentic stage setting.

"Kempy" is the story of a 'high-lutin' daughter of a retired and almost too thrifty farmer. In a fit of anger she marries Kempy, the local plumber who has come to fix the kitchen pipe. Had the matter ended there things might have gone smoothly. But Kate, the daughter, is really in love with Duke Merrill and Kempy has learned to love Ruth, Kate's younger sister. The situation becomes quite involved and only after a night of laughter and much fun does the situation right itself.

Those in the cast include: Austen Larson, Kempy; Daisy Barnett, Ma Bence; Ethel Hartman, Kate Bence; Ernest Orazzi, Dad Bence; Walter Zelinsky, Ben Wade; William Lange, Duke Merrill; Hilda Leversidge, Ruth Bence; Helen Zelinsky, Jane Wade.

Other guild members active in the production are: Virginia Murray, Dorothea Wenner, Archie Lummis, Dorothy Settle, Elsie Wright, Horace Murray, John Ferguson, Louis Hartman and Mrs. Louis Hartman. The play is being directed by Axel Kleinsorg, a club member.

Grangers Believe Crop Yields Are Much Better

LANGHORNE, Aug. 13.—At a meeting of the Middletown Grange held in the Friends' School house, here, Wednesday evening, the grangers discussed present day methods of crop yield in comparison with those of a quarter of a century ago.

Answering the query, "Are fertilizer and the methods of farming yielding better crops today than in times past?" One granger, Edwin Rich asserted that they were because twenty-five years ago no one ever heard of growing 400 bushels of potatoes to the acre.

He also pointed out the better methods of farming and the advantages fertilizer has for a wheat crop.

In the absence of the master, Henry Pickering, who was unable to be present because of serving on a registration board, Walker Jackson served as the presiding officer.

Because of the inclement weather, only nine members were present. It was reported this morning that Langhorne farmers benefitted immensely from the rains which swept over Bucks county Wednesday and caused no damage even though they were accompanied by a rather severe electrical storm in the evening.

A report of the picnic held at Cadwallader Park, in Trenton, N. J., was given by members of the committee.

The lecturer's hour was in charge of Anna Johnson.

Readings were given by Mae Newbold, "Does the Mirror Lie?" and Gertrude Jackson, "County Sales." Georgeanna Thompson read the household scrapbook.

The next meeting will be held Wednesday evening, August 25th, in the school house. No announcement of the type of program was made.

RESEARCH WORK, EMILIE FARM, IS PRESENTED

Historical Place is the Battleground On Which Research
Forces Are Aligned

PROBLEMS ARE STUDIED

The research work being conducted at the Wistar Institute Biological Farm at Emilie is the subject of an article by Steven M. Spencer, appearing in a recent issue of The Philadelphia Evening Bulletin.

The information relative to the farm is as follows:

A farm established 250 years ago by Phineas Pemberton, one of William Penn's most valued friends and Provincial council members, is today the battleground on which all the medical and biological departments of the University of Pennsylvania are aligning research forces.

Principal enemies are those diseases which affect men and animals in common. Other ailments of farm livestock will be studied. And ultimately, with physician, veterinarian, bacteriologist and biochemist, working hand in hand, the School of Animal Pathology of the University of Pennsylvania, may become one of the outstanding medical research institutions in the country.

Which would please Phineas Pemberton exceedingly. For Pemberton, who came to Bucks county in 1682 when the Quakers were being sorely persecuted in his native Lancashire, was an ambitious fellow. "The ablest as well as one of the best men in the Province," in Penn's own words. He held numerous public offices in Bucks county and was a member of the Provincial Council of Pennsylvania for five years and of the Assembly for six years, the latter three as speaker. The Council occasionally met in the stone farmhouse which Pemberton completed on his place in 1687 (and which is part of the present big mansion) and Penn himself was frequently a guest there, according to Horace M. Lippincott, Philadelphia historian.

The farm, named for a town in Lancashire, came down through Pemberton's descendants and was willed to a collateral relative, Ethingam B. Morris, near the end of the last century. Following the banker's death, the property, now including 400 acres of rich, rolling land, numerous valuable farm buildings and a lot of prize-winning livestock was presented by Mr. Morris' heirs to the University, of which he was for many years a trustee.

Incidentally, another descendant of the founder of Bolton Farm is Dr. Ralph Pemberton, professor of medicine at the University of Pennsylvania.

May Soon Remove Long Detour at Edison Bridge

DOYLESTOWN, Aug. 13.—The long detour on the Lackawanna Trail at Edison bridge may soon be removed. It was announced yesterday, when it was stated that as soon as the two new concrete approaches to the bridge are completed a short detour over the old bridge may be established. This will take about two more weeks, it is estimated.

The one-mile stretch that will eliminate the old Edison bridge and curves will be completed in late September, it is believed.

TAME PORCUPINE AND OWNER PAY VISIT HERE

A. D. Lindsay Says "Rusty"
Makes Best Kind of A House Pet

BEEN PALS FOR 7 YEARS

You've seen it happen in the funny papers, you've read about it in books, and you've probably been warned to give wide berth to the porcupine and its shooting quills.

But just ask A. Dean Lindsay of Tampa, Florida, who is believed to be the only person who has succeeded in making a domestic pet of a porcupine.

Lindsay stopped in Bristol last night and was accompanied by his pet porcupine, "Rusty." Now "Rusty" is just as tame and as nice a little girl as you would ever want to see or fondle. Lindsay takes "Rusty" wherever he goes and in fact he won't go anywhere or stay anywhere, if "Rusty" can't go or stay with him. "She's my pal," says Lindsay.

In 1935 Ripley wrote about "Rusty" and drew a cartoon of Lindsay, founder of "Young Americans" and stated that Lindsay was the only person to have succeeded in taming and domesticating a porcupine.

Last night while Lindsay was here for a few hours he met a number of folks to whom he introduced "Rusty." "Rusty" was placed upon the shoulders of the individuals and snuggled down closely, being perfectly at home. Then after a few minutes "Rusty" would squeal just a little and look with longing eyes to Lindsay away from whom apparently she was not contented.

SUMMER MARCHES ON

With the international yacht races out of the way, Congress at last nearing the window of its protracted session, but threatening to first pass a half dozen new bills to make over the American system of government, including as usual a tax bill to end taxpayers' unfairness—ye gods!—to the government—with these developments being chronicled in the public prints it looks like Summer is definitely on its last legs.

The Summer resort business is working up to the grand crescendo which is Labor Day, when all but a few stragglers will make a wild dash home to engage in the more mundane activities of life. There may or may not be, but probably are, some sweltering weeks ahead, but their number cannot be large, and already the lawn mower is wielded less frequently as the grass droops in the August sun and soon that implement will be stored in the garage after a quite active season, or so it seemed to the widders.

Yes, Fall is coming with a rush as school kids begin to count the days. Summer marches on.

BUILDING BOOM

Near the top of the list of activities concerned in the production of "durable goods" is the building industry. In normal times, construction operations provide an important field for the investment of capital and a major source of enjoyment. That is why statistics of building are carefully followed, and why the present improvement, slight though it may be by comparison to the boom years, is widely welcomed.

The relatively large increase in residential construction, noted generally throughout the country, is being attributed in considerable measure to the greater availability of mortgage funds. These include both money supplied by private sources and that offered in connection with the government's program to encourage building. The important fact here, however, is not the cause but the result, which has been to stimulate one of the principal industries in which the depression and unemployment have centered.

JAPS AT IT AGAIN

Having first engaged in a little brush with the Reds on the Manchurian border to test their theory that the Russians were still afraid of Nippon, and the reaction having been as expected, the Japs are now busily engaged in their old pastime of killing off Chinese preparatory to annexing some more Chinese territory.

Chinese are putting up a somewhat better fight than the last time the blood-thirsty Japs engaged in their merry sport, but the outcome, it seems at this distance, must be the same. Japan is well-equipped with all the modern death-dealing devices, and its cannon fodder is thoroughly imbued with the idea that it is an honor to die for the Sun God, the old bizzard who poses as their divinely-sent Emperor and has the dumb pygmies believing it.

Barring outside aid, which is not now in sight, China must again take it, and can only hope, with the rest of the world, for the day when the murderers from the sand bar empire get their good and plenty.

A Maine correspondent of a Boston paper wishes to know if a counterfeit bill dated July 1, 1853, is of any value. It is in good condition.

Tame Porcupine And Owner Pay Visit Here

Lindsay says the flying needles story about "porky" is just a legend.

In fact a porcupine won't fight although it can whip anything except a bear and a fisher, Lindsay declares.

Lindsay and his strange pal are en route to New York where Lindsay is to enter a hospital. Asked what was to become of "Rusty" when he went to the hospital, "Oh, she'll go with me," was his answer. "I was in a hospital before and the doctors and nurses had a grand time with 'Rusty.'"

"The porcupine doesn't have to fight," he went on to explain, all it has to do is stiffen its needles and let the other fellow do the fighting.

"But the bear uses trickery. It circles the porcupine, which always crouches with its back to its adversary, and gets its dizzy. When the porcupine's foot strikes a root or a stone and it falls, the bear pounces upon it and attacks its stomach. The fisher, which is like a weasel, sneaks up on the porcupine while it's asleep and cuts a blood vessel in its throat without even awakening it."

Lindsay goes about the country lecturing before schools and other groups, he says, on nature studies.

Science says a porcupine is not intelligent enough to tame, but "Rusty" has been Lindsay's pet since he caught it in a Canadian woods near Lake Erie seven years ago. Since then it has been his constant companion.

He considers it the perfect household pet, and says it is more affectionate than a dog or cat. Children may play with "Rusty" with perfect safety, but "just" for a little while. Lindsay has trained it to stop girls from picking it up.

"Rusty" is so harmless that Lindsay has trained her to sleep with him. "Rusty's" favorite food is sweet potatoes but she eats anything a rabbit will eat. She has gone as long as five months without water.

"Her quills are soft and pliable when she's in a tranquil mood," said Lindsay. Then the interviewer was permitted to feel them. Then Lindsay roused "Rusty's" ire by blowing down her neck. Up came the quills in battle formation, stiff, sharp and menacing.

"More Than Love"

by LEWIS ALLEN BROWNE

COPYRIGHT 1931, BY KING FEATURES SYNDICATE, INC.

Leland Forbes and Jeanette Morse meet in Virginia and fall in love. They plan an early marriage. Forbes's only relative is a sister who is married to a worthless brute. Leland has not mentioned her to Jeanette. Just before the day set for the marriage this sister, Lola, comes to Leland with her baby. She is in terror, and explains that she has killed her brutal husband when he attacked her. There were no witnesses and her husband's relatives, who hate her, will, she fears, commit perjury to send her to the chair. Leland feels that this is a duty more than love and takes his sister and baby to a hiding place in the Blue Ridge mountains, leaving a mysterious farewell note for Jeanette. After a long period Jeanette finds Leland at the mountain hut but seeing the baby and his sister, and hearing Lola try to explain that they are not married, Jeanette runs away, heartbroken, before Leland can stop her to explain.

CHAPTER V.

"Jeanette!"

Leland shouted with all the power of his lungs.

"Stop—please stop, Jeanette!"

He was certain that she could hear him for her car made but little noise over the soft dirt road.

But Jeanette did not turn her head. She had heard him, as he knew well enough she did, but her mind was in a turmoil from the shock.

Naturally but one thought came to her—Leland had buried himself in the woods with another woman.

Why the woman had called out to her that she was not married Jeanette couldn't understand. It seemed a most unusual thing to do.

That made it much worse, to Jeanette's way of looking at it. That Leland could stoop to a common-law marriage would have been absolutely beyond her belief if she hadn't been there, seen Leland, heard the woman say that they were not married and also seen the baby.

It was quite a sizeable tot, Jeanette thought. The little chap had been running around in the tiny yard when she walked down the path and when Leland had come out and lifted the child up.

The child's name, she overheard, was Leland. He called the woman "mama," and from the size of the child Jeanette figured that he had been born probably a year before she had met Leland.

So that was it—Leland was the father, she told herself, and out of a sense of duty according to his views he had refused to marry Jeanette and had run away to care for his child and his mother.

There was no explaining. Jeanette said to herself, over and over.

Meanwhile, as her car disappeared from Leland's view, he lit across the woods to the Orson place and had a talk with Harvey.

Orson did not know of any strange woman being in that locality although someone had said that a "furrin woman" was living at the Baumgartner farm near Crockett station.

"Orson," Leland said, "I dare not go out there just now, but I wish you would drive over and find this woman, take a note to her."

Orson would do anything for Leland out of friendship, and, in addition, Leland paid him well for his services, bringing in produce and the like. He gladly agreed to do.

"On second thought, Orson," Leland said, "I will not write a note."

He had followed Orson out and was helping him harness his horse. He regretted, then, that he had never bought a small car for the man to use.

"When you find her she may refuse to talk, Orson," Leland went on with his instructions, "but you can say to her that the woman you saw is my sister."

"Shall I say it in front of any one else, Mister Forbes?"

"Yes, you can say just that—'The woman you saw is my sister'—I am sure, then, that she will let you talk with her alone. You tell her she must come back at once."

Orson agreed. Leland watched him drive away and then he went back home.

Lola was terribly distressed, as he knew she would be.

"Leland," was her greeting, "that woman means something to you. Why have you kept it secret?"

"There was no need to disturb you, Lola. You have had about all the burden your slim shoulders can bear. No need to worry, now, it will all be straightened out, I feel sure."

"Who is she, Leland?"

After nearly a week had passed he met Jeanette just outside Maxin's office. She started to walk past him.

"Jeanette Morse—she illustrates my books."

"Isn't she more than a business friend?"

"Let's not discuss it, dear."

"You love her—don't you?"

He saw that there was no way of evading this now, and decided to tell her the truth.

"Yes, I love her. We expected—that is, I hope to marry her, some day."

"Tell me, how soon were you to be married at the time you brought me here?"

"Oh, fairly soon. I intended to tell you, but you were having so much trouble right then, but it will work out."

Lola sat down suddenly and began to cry.

"What a miserable failure I am, and how I have spoiled your life and the life of that pretty woman," she sobbed.

He tried his best to comfort her. In a measure she was right, but he tried to make her see that it was something she couldn't avoid.

"I could have taken your advice. I should have had more sense than to lose my head and think that I loved that man because he was good looking—if I hadn't married him."

"It's won't help now, Lola, there is the present and the future to face."

He told her about sending Orson out to Crockett on the strength of the report that some strange woman was living there.

It seemed hours and hours to Leland that Orson was gone. Or perhaps ages, for it was nearly dusk when Orson left his horse on the knoll and came down the path.

He was alone. Leland felt at once that Orson had failed. But as he ran out to greet Orson he called, "Is she coming back?"

"I reckon I failed ye, Mr. Forbes. When I got to Baumgartner's place she had paid up and drove away in her car."

Leland shook his head dolefully. "Hit weren't no use of me a followin' of her, Mister Forbes, with my old horse and her in a car. She drove down toward Wytheville. Effen Baumgartner had him a car we'd a followed."

"No, you couldn't do more, Orson—I'm grateful."

Orson could see that Forbes was bitterly disappointed. He said, briefly, that he hated to see him "grieve," and went back to his horse.

Lola stood in the doorway. She knew, then, how disappointed her brother must be.

"You must write to her and explain everything, Leland," she said.

"You enough sorrow and misery."

"This is more than love, Lola. We won't argue. I shall have you safely aboard a fruit steamer. In the Argentine you will be safe. Cordoba is high and healthy and there is a good American and English colony there. You speak Spanish fairly well. I have been thinking of this for some time in preference to Italy."

Leland spoke rapidly. He was all energy. As soon as he could see his sister safely aboard the steamer he would go north. If the authorities went after him he could say he had been searching the world over for his sister. If they wanted to hold him as an accessory in the killing of Harlow, he would have to face the music, but anything would be better than letting matters go on.

"And Jeanette, unintentionally, is likely to tell of seeing me. It is evident, Lola, that she has placed no connection between the—what happened—and myself. She must not have even read about it," Leland said.

Lola agreed. It was the best thing to be done. She had already caused enough misery. She understood now why Leland had been so sad all through this, a sadness he had been unable to disguise. It startled her to think what a sacrifice he had made. She clung to him and wept again, told him no woman ever had such a brother and disputed him when he said that this was more than love.

"Nothing can be more than love, Leland—real love. I know because I never had real love."

There wasn't much to pack. Harvey Orson came over and took orders. He drove away and brought a man with a car, a man he could trust.

Probably the happiest man in Grayson County was Orson's son, Wallis. He was about to marry, and Leland, who had bought this house, gave it to the boy, with all of its furnishings.

The next afternoon they started out, driving over Stone mountains into Tennessee and to Mountain City.

There were no more difficulties. Lola was fitted out in New Orleans and sailed for South America under an assumed name. At the last moment Leland decided to go with her, he couldn't leave her to go alone. She fought against this but he insisted.

A few weeks later Lola was established in a little home in Cordoba, with servants and everything essential. Not until then did Leland feel that he could leave her.

On his return to New York he went directly to the office of Gerald Adams, his lawyer and old-time friend. Adams greeted him pleasantly enough but his first words were, "We will talk about everything, Leland, except your absence and your reasons for it."

From this office he went to the apartment where Jeanette lived with her married sister, Mrs. Kellogg.

Naturally she received him coldly, did not ask him in and to his questions about Jeanette, he repeated:

"I don't know where she is."

There was no use trying to explain to this woman. He left, greatly discouraged, although he believed that Mrs. Kellogg did know where Jeanette was.

If he could locate Jeanette he would explain now. He would wind up his affairs and take her away, to Europe, down to see Lola, anywhere, everywhere, except back home again.

Mr. Maxin tried not to show surprise when Leland walked into his office.

"We failed to locate you or Paul Justin out in Oregon and gave it up," he said.

"It was unfortunate, but necessary," was the only comment Leland made. He talked business with Maxin for a half hour and then said, casually, "Where is Miss Morse these days?"

"In town—she was in here yesterday. She is doing illustrations for some of our juvenile books."

"I'll probably see her—living with her married sister I suppose?"

"I suppose so."

"I am grateful that you were loyal," Leland said.

Maxin seemed surprised but made no comment on this.

Leland still dreaded what might follow. He still feared that some of the Connecticut authorities would learn of his presence in the city and make trouble for him.

He felt half ashamed, but he began wearing heavy tortoise shell glasses. They go far in disguising one.

For three days he telephoned to the Kellogg apartment and on each occasion he was told that Miss Morse was out, that the speaker did not know when she would be back, that the speaker could take no message.

Jeanette had given these orders, Leland realized this.

He was determined to find her. He thought of writing but he couldn't put into writing things necessary in an explanation for it wouldn't be fair to his sister and Leland never forgot that his sister was still in danger if she were ever found.

Every day he dropped in at his publisher's office on one pretext or another, hoping to find Jeanette. After nearly a week had passed he met Jeanette just outside of the Maxin office.

She started to walk past him. "Jeanette!" he cried, barring her way.

She looked at him sadly. "Please—I must go," she said. "You must listen to me, Jeanette, I want—"

"Leland Forbes—I despise you! How dare you speak to me!" Jeanette cried with a flash of anger that startled him.

SHORT GAME ENDS IN A VICTORY FOR LANDRETHS

Last night at Landreth Ball Park, in an abbreviated game cut short by a heavy rain in the first half of the sixth inning, the Landreth Seeds defeated the Jewish Stars 5 to 0. Bill Everingham was on the mound for the farmers and allowed only two hits and struck out seven. The hitting of Bill Griggs featured. He hit two doubles and a single out of three times up. A very fast double play Barcelona to Liberator to Griggs and the wonderful one handed catch by Stein, the visitors second baseman, were the outstanding plays.

ODD FELLOWS AND HIBS TO DECIDE BEST TEAM

Which is the better team, the Odd Fellows or the Hibernians? This question, that has been on the minds of the Bristol Twilight League followers for many weeks, will be decided in a five-game series between the two clubs which opens on the Edgely diamond, Sunday afternoon, at three o'clock. The second game will be a twilight tilt to be played on Leedom's field, Tuesday evening, at six o'clock.

The first half of the loop was won by the Hibernians who dropped but three tilts. The Odd Fellows dropped the same number of games in winning the second half. Both clubs had a winning streak of eight straight games. In the series of six games between the teams, they have broken even.

Many fans claim that the backbone of the Hibs' team, Eddie Sullivan, who is playing in the Canadian League, will be missed considerably and Manager Lawrence Delaney will have to do quite a bit of shifting if he intends to cop the first game.

Odd Fellows are wondering about the condition of their star third baseman, Jimmy Cooper, who was injured Sunday. If Cooper is missing, the Odds will have trouble in filling his post at the hot corner.

FIVE OF LEGION BOXERS TO BE ON ST. ANN'S CARD

At least five members of the boxing team of the Liberty Post, No. 308, Willow Grove American Legion, will be on the card at the weekly boxing show held in the St. Ann's outdoor arena, Wood and Franklin streets, by the St. Ann's Athletic Association with the sanction of the Middle Atlantic district of the A. A. U.

The Liberty Post conducts bi-weekly boxing shows in its home arena and is repaying the St. Ann's organization for the sending of five local mittmen to one of its shows several weeks ago.

The Post is sending all 160-pounders to this section. It is most likely that Sylvester Purnell, St. Ann's, will be matched with one of them as they belong to the same division that the Purple and Gold fighter is classed. Purnell has won six straight bouts, four via the knockout route.

The Willow Grove fighters who will probably be picked to come here are: Bobby Piece, Henry Miesel, Nick Chusek, George Huey and Eddie Groves. Of these Groves is considered the top-notch and it is with him that Moffo is trying to match Purnell. Several weeks ago, Groves gave Walter Padlo a close fight.

Matchmaker Moffo has received many requests for another bout with Leo Cicanti, newly-acquired St. Ann's entry in the 147-pound division. Cicanti went over big in his bout with James Reilly, Holme A. A., last Monday night, and now the fans are clamoring to see him swing that southpaw punch again.

Tickets are on sale at the St. Ann's club house.

vanian and Graduate School of Medicine and an outstanding authority on arthritis.

Dr. Alfred Stengel, vice-president of the University in charge of medical affairs, stated in announcing plans for the research farm's development that the State will contribute $100,000 for the biennium of 1937-39. The property was formally taken over on July 1, research work is already being started there, although a director has not yet been appointed.

Dr. George A. Dick, dean of the School of Veterinary Medicine, explained that the farm will not be conducted as a separate school but will serve as a research laboratory for all of the medical branches and will also be used for veterinary school teaching purposes, groups of students to be brought out for brief periods during the year. A large loft over the garage building will probably be converted into dormitories for housing the students.

Among the disease problems being studied are:

Influenza, suffered by hogs as well as humans.

Leukemia, a blood disease common to humans and chickens and often accompanied in the chickens by paralysis and tumors.

Tuberculosis, pretty well eliminated from dairy cows but present in enough places to constitute a threat which must be watched.

Periodic ophthalmia, or "moon blindness" in horses.

Mastitis, an udder inflammation which renders more dairy cattle unfit than any other disease.
